HY211- HISTORICAL METHOD-I

The paper seeks to provide students with a clear cut scientific method of research, i.e., the basic tools and techniques of research as distinguished from methodology- the science of constructing knowledge. The two papers on methodology are primarily practice oriented papers directly linked to research. However they are not totally devoid of theory for it requires the students to gain considerable theoretical knowledge in textual analysis and source criticism.

HY 231- ISSUES IN HISTORIOGRAPHY

The Paper requires from students sustained efforts to accumulate knowledge about the myriad perspectives of the past that emerge in the course of the evolution of knowledge relevant to the doing of history. The student can grasp why history came to be re-written differently from time to time under conceptual presuppositions. The readings appended are highly selective and aimed at facilitating the student's efforts to grasp the syllabi. The teachers and the students are expected to augment the list to make it more comprehensive.

HY 241-INDIAN HISTORIOGRAPHY

The Paper aims at the development of analytical skills and accumulation of significant knowledge about Indian Historiography in its variegated perspectives. The paper is selective and intends to convey to the students the differing genres of historical practice in India and hence it is representative and structural, rather than all inclusive and comprehensive. The student can grasp why history came to be written differently in time and space and the ideology that inspired and impacted its formation. The readings appended are consciously selective and aimed at easily facilitating the student's efforts to grasp the syllabi. However, this does not preclude the necessity to augment the list of readings, readily available, to consummate the desire for higher studies and research.
